Memorial day exercises took place in the Davis Monument. The ceremonies it the Davis Monument the address being delivered by the Rev. George W. Finley, D. D., pastor of the Tinkling Spring Presbyterian Church, of Augusta county, and a former member of the Rockbridge Artillery. Although the lowering clouds kept away many of these who had attended the monument ceremony, the full program was carried out, a fine drizzle falling while the parade was en route to the cemetery. The clouds held up, however, during Dr. Finley's address, which was punctured with the roar of cannon as the salutes in honor of the dead were hurled over the river by the guns of the Howitzers.

Troops Pass in Review.

The exercises opened with a review of the troops in parade, the military of the city with bands passing the speaker's stand, while the veteran organizations and the ladies of the various Confederate associations were given seats within the enclosure.

Loutenant-Governer J. Taylor Ellyson presided, the opening prayer being made by the Rev. Landon R. Mason, rector of Grace Episcopal Church, and chaplain or R. E. Lee Camp. Mr. Mason closed his prayer with an earnest petition that nothing might be done to increase strife, and that Southern people might always have the strength to stand for the defense of truth and of a character villfied,

Dr. Finley made a graceful address, abounding in classic quotation most aptly introduced, holding the close attention of all within the sound of his voice. He gave a graphic description of the ceremony in Richmond about thirty years ago, when the statue of Stonewall Jackson, presented by Eng. Ilse there can be no heroism without self-sacrifice. Then were the sacrifices of the gentlemen to the State of Vir.

"But there is life in the old land et," continued Dr. Finley, after his ribute to those who fell in battle. There are still those who glorified the ighteous cause and lived, and there are the sons and daughters of the fall."
